

On the pinnacle of the Nebraska State Capitol stands the statue of a sower, created by the sculptor Lee Lawrie who, inspired by the Czech immigrant farmers near Crete (Nebraska), formed this sower as a symbol of hope of the tilling of the Plains.

No better way could be found to honor the Czech settlers in Nebraska than in this work done by this distinguished sculptor as it stands to remind us all of what these men and women contributed to their State.

Lincoln Evening Star,
January 24, 1963, p. 1